How can I protect my own privacy these days?

2019/07/17

Hi Jeffrey! Modern society is full of surprises, and because we are living in the digital age, privacy violation became much easier to conduct for governmental organizations and huge corporations to reach different goals. But their goals are not as important as the fact that the right for privacy that any of us has by default seems to be forgotten, especially it is easy to notice starting from the last year. Want some examples? Companies want to know more about us for targeted ads. Your friends and family can spy on you. The microphone in your smartphone can be used for eavesdropping. Your hotel might have mini-bar spying on you. Your shoes can track your location and tell bad guys where are you now. You might get a bill shock after pleasant trip. Government is spying on you. Plenty of famous companies are snooping around your information. And this is only small part from the full list. Paul Venezia in his article at Infoworld describes current situation in the very interesting manner and with a little bit of irony. But if you put together what he wrote there and world tendency to spy on everyone, as it is already clearly seen at least in United Kingdom, India and, as it was recently discovered, USA, then you will probably agree that soon all of us might need to do all we can to stop our privacy from being stolen from us.
